- Maybe a partial re shuffle,
- I don't think a full reshuffle is the answer.
- Reducing the number of teams in A grade is a step backwards
- Ideally a return to eight teams in A-grade would allow a better pathway for players coming through B grade to be able to make the jump into A grade.
- I would prefer to see the struggling teams draft in or develop players to bring the standard up.
- So for me a reshuffle would give me the opportunity to connect, play with and learn from these players.
- Having a few teams stacked with recent or current Australian elite players does not help further the sport.
- Junior players represent the future of the sport - resounding losses and unsportsmanlike behaviour contributes to not retaining juniors.
- I feel that if there is a miss match in skill between teams it stems largely from teams whose players do not show up regularly.
- I believe the loss of skilled players, and the decrease in players moving up to A grade, is a result of the same attitude driving this debate. Perhaps instead of reducing teams and reshuffling the remaining players to suit their desires, we should recruit more from lower grade
- I am of the opinion that there is a level of elitism within A Grade
- I think overall it might be good for the competition.
- Need better opportunities for younger players "coming through" including a coaching/mentoring mindset from captains.
- Some teams are very strong and very skilled while.. they are made up of both state and Australian reps.. while make the other teams look weak and makes the games not enjoyable.
- I think reshuffling teams could make a better opportunity for more newer players to move up from B grade.
